

Digital Content Developer for Primary Healthcare

Contract: 2 year fixed term contract
Hours: Part-time (20 hours p.w./0.5 FTE)
Location: Remote (home-based)
Salary: £26,600 to £28,700 p.a. (pro-rata)

Digital Campus is a recently established not-for-profit company committed to promoting learning research, innovation and developing capacity through the use of appropriate technology, focussed on the primary healthcare sector. We have recently received funding for a new project, with support from DFID, using mobile learning technologies with rural health workers in Ethiopia.

Our new innovative mobile platform OppiaMobile (<http://oppia-mobile.org>) uses mobile technologies to complement, facilitate and enhance primary health workers training and professional career development.

- You will be working with our medical and technical team to create and source high quality primary healthcare training content, activities and assessment for rural health workers in their continuous professional development activities.
- You will ensure that all the training material is prepared to the highest standards of presentation, accuracy and educational value.
- The ideal candidate will have excellent organisational skills and an ability to keep to tight deadlines. Proven experience of instructional design and teaching is essential.
